CARL ANDERSON'S

HENRY

RINKY FINDS "TIME" ON HIS HANDS!

"This is the life!" Rinky shouted. It was kind of silly to yell because there wasn't anyone around to hear Rinky. Swimming to the river's edge, Rinky pulled himself out of the water. He climbed the little wooden bridge that crossed the Klickachoo River and set himself for a fancy high dive.

Rinky hit the water headfirst and kept going down . . . down . . . down until he was at the very bottom of the river. His eyes were glued to the sparkling bit of metal he had spotted while poised on the bridge. Rinky wasn't sure what it was but all he could think of was some secret buried treasure!

Rinky grabbed the shiny substance and churned his way to the surface. With a few swift strokes he made his way to shore. There he looked at his find!

It was a brand-new lady's wrist watch! "WOW!" Rinky exclaimed. "This is exactly what Mother wants for her birthday!" thought Rinky excitedly.

Quickly, Rinky mounted his pony and rode back to the Circle-O-Ranch. "I'll keep this a secret," Rinky said to himself, as he smiled. "Boy, won't Mother be surprised!" Rinky said aloud.

Rinky was turning his mount toward the ranch house when suddenly his father went galloping past him at a furious pace. Rinky noticed that his father looked very grim.

"Daddy!" Rinky shouted after his father. But his voice was lost mid the clatter of hoofs. Rinky sensed something was wrong. He nudged Whitey, his pony, and off they went after Rinky's father.

The trail led right to the Klickachoo River. Rinky could see his father's horse grazing idly at the river's edge. But Father didn't seem to be around.

Rinky got off his pony and went to the bank of the river. He looked down into the clear water and was amazed to see his father swimming under water at the bottom of the river. And he seemed to be SEARCHING for something!

Rinky watched his father swim up to the surface. Rinky smiled and shouted to his father, "Daddy, I bet I know. . . ."

"Don't bother me, Rinky! I'm very busy!" his father answered angrily.

Here he had the very wrist watch his father was diving for in his pocket. But his father was so intent on the search he wouldn't let Rinky tell him the news. Rinky sat on the bank and watched the bubbles trail from his father's mouth up to the surface.

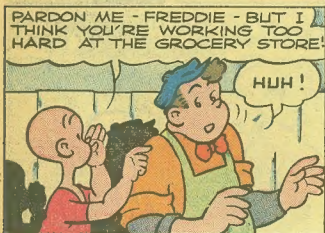

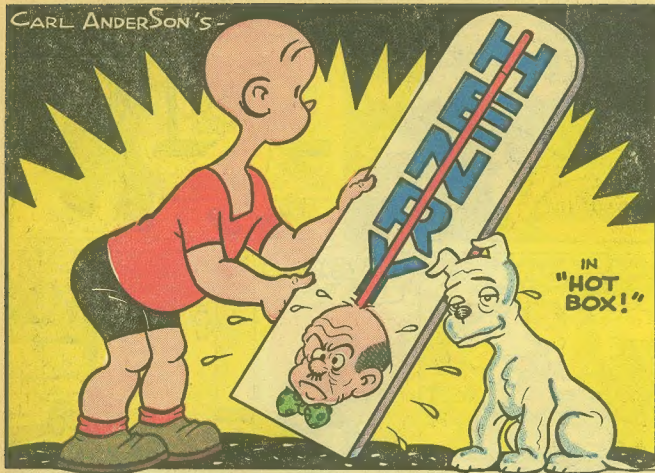

"Gee, Daddy sure can stay under a long time!" thought Rinky. "He'll really be surprised when I show him the wrist watch. I'll bet he bought it for Mother's birthday and then accidentally dropped it in the river!"

Then Rinky stopped smiling and began to do some serious thinking. "I'd better tell Daddy I found the watch right away or he'll really be angry!"

But Rinky never got a chance to tell his father he had found the wrist watch. Every time his father would come to the surface, Rinky would jump up and down and yell. But his father would just glance at him grimly and dive under the surface again!

It was getting dark. Rinky's father was getting tired. Rinky was getting hungry. At last his father gave up the search and pulled himself out of the water.

Rinky said, "If you're looking for . . ." With an angry glance his father said, "Never mind what I'm looking for! Anyway, you couldn't possibly have found it!"

Rinky's father dressed quickly. They rode in silence toward the ranch.

Then Rinky's father started talking more to himself than to Rinky. "It's waterproof. It'll be as good as new if I can recover it. Hmmm . . . I know what I'll do! I'll buy one of those Frogman suits the navy uses!"

Rinky tried several times to tell his father but he couldn't get him to listen. Then Rinky thought of something else. When he returned the wrist watch, as he knew he would, then what would he, Rinky, give his mother for a present?

The thought of it shocked Rinky into silence. So the two of them rode toward the ranch house. Each one had a serious problem to think over. They were both frowning thoughtfully as they rode up to the bulletin board posted outside the corral.

Rinky's father stopped and hastily scribbled a note. He got off his horse and stuck the notice on the board with a thumbtack. Then he got back on his horse and frowned deeper than ever.

Rinky had almost forgotten about the watch. He was trying to think up a way to earn some money with which to buy his mother a birthday present.

He had already spent his allowance for the week. And his mother's birthday was only two days off. Still thinking hard, Rinky leaned over and read the notice his father had just tacked up on the board. "YIPEI!" shouted Rinky.

Rinky was so startled by what he had read that he fell right out of his saddle. He hit the ground with a loud thud! His father looked at him oddly and helped him to his feet.

"What's wrong with you today, Rinky?" his father asked worriedly. "Nothing, Father," answered Rinky excitedly and hastily dug into his pocket.

Father watched him with faint interest. Then he saw what Rinky was holding in his hand. Ker . . . PLUNK! Rinky's father fell right out of the saddle . . . possibly for the very first time in his life as he was an expert horseman.

The silence was broken. Both of them shouted and smiled at each other at the same time. In a few minutes they both calmed down a bit and Rinky explained how he had found the wrist watch.

His father was all smiles now. He looked at the beautiful gift and grinned. Then he dug into his pocket and pulled out a crisp new ten dollar bill. "Here, Rinky! When I posted that reward notice I never thought it would bring such quick action!"

They both laughed happily as they rode to the ranch house door. Rinky was thinking about the present he would buy his mother with the ten-dollar reward . . . and his father was thinking what a brilliant little fellow his son Rinky could be . . . at certain times!
